AS THE NEWS BREAKS

Dallas, Tex., April 13.—Hearing of the proposition to create a drainage district No. 2 in Dallas County was set for today before the county commissioners court. If ordered, the district would embrace about 1,250 acres in the Trinity River bottoms.

Brenham, Tex., April 13.—The fourth district of the Texas Federation of Women's Club was holding its annual meeting here today. Aside from the routine business of the district, officers will be elected for the ensuing year and delegates to the state convention and the biennial convention of the national federation in New York, May 23, will be selected. Miss Decca Lamar West of Waco is president of the fourth district.

Dallas, Tex., April 13.—A state-wide campaign for members of the "Buy-it-

Made-in-Texas" Association will be commenced within the next two weeks, according to announcement from officers of the association here today.

A series of "Buy-it-made-in-Texas" banquets, such as held at Austin during the University of Texas journalism week are planned in conjunction with the campaign. One of these will San Antonio April 21.

It is also planned to issue a weekly trade bulletin, giving news concerning Texas manufacturers, for the information of the association's members.

Austin, Tex., April 13.—The degree of Bachelor of Business Administration, which will be given for the first time to graduates of the University of Texas this year, is the third of its kind in the United States. Boston University and Northeastern University now grant this degree, while there are several other colleges granting a degree requiring a similar course of study.

The prescribed work for the degree of Bachelor of Business Administration is said to be strenuous. The course includes accounting theory and practice, business law and a total of at least eight courses.

In order to obtain this degree, the student must show the ability to read the literature of trade and commerce in some foreign language, and early in his senior year, the student must present for the approval of the faculty school of business administration, has prepared an elaborate program of study, suggestive and detailed for students aspiring to this degree, in which he adapts work to meet the particular vocation chosen by the student.

Austin, Tex., April 13.—A concerted effort to increase the yield of sweet potatoes in Texas this year will be bought from outside points. He is now engaged in promoting interest made by the state warehouse department and the extension department of the Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Dr. P. M. Harkey, field organizer of the college, has issued a statement that last year 1,000 cars of sweet potatoes were stored in the building of curing plants to store the potatoes at home.

"I never put off till tomorrow what I can do today," remarked the self-complacent man. "I tried that plan," rejoined the willing worker. "I got to crowding myself till I had to put in nights doing over what I had done badly the day before."—Washington Star.

"I think Professor Hibrows is a wonderful lecturer," said the Old Fogey. "He brings things home to you that you never saw before." "That's nothing," replied the Grouch. "I have a laundry wagon driver who can do this."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Three can hold their peace if two be away.—Herbert.

"One hundred chorus girls in this production, eh? Where's all your trunks?" "We don't need trunks any more. We send the costumes ahead by parcel post."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The more virtuous any man is the less easily does he suspect others to be vicious.—Cicero.

"A man dat's workin' hard tryin' to reform himself," said Uncle Eben. "don't seem to git nigh so much in encouragement and applause as de man dat gits up on a platform an' scolds folks in general."—Washington Star.

BUSINESS MEN ARE BURDEN-BEARERS

OVERHEAD EXPENSES OF COMMUNITY REST UPON HIS SHOULDERS

(Editor's Note.—The following is the fifth of a series of articles by J. S. Cullinan, Chairman of the Texas Economic League, on the Administration of Justice, to which subject the League is now addressing itself.)

By J. S. Cullinan.

Only a very small part of the Administration of Justice is under the jurisdiction of the courts, and office-holders are not the only ones who tyrannize business. The lawyers jockey most all the righteousness out of legal justice; the uncertainty of the law terrorizes, and the law's delay tantalizes those who seek justice in our courts, but most of the important differences of the people are adjudicated outside the court room despite the activities of walking delegates of the legal profession. Every man who manages a business is a Chancellor in the Supreme Court of Civilization, and there is not a day that his docket is not filled with important cases. He must deal justly with capital and with labor—the two greatest economic problems in this world, and on which the prosperity of the country and happiness of the people of every nation depend. He must deal justly with his customers, with the public and pass judgment upon the elements of society which are dependent upon his generosity for subsistence. He must coordinate the legislative, judicial and executive branches of Justice under one head, and frequently try cases instantly without witnesses or jury, and he must stand personally responsible for his decisions, for he is always questioned and sometimes boycotted for his rulings on contributions as well as on business matters. He has no sheriff to enforce his decrees, and his only authority is reason.

The business man who buys and sells has many tribulations as well as responsibilities. It is he who must bear the overhead expenses of the community and upon his shoulders rest the burdens of society. He is the most deserving, less appreciated, and less rewarded of all the factors that make up the business life of the country. After he has given able consideration to the economic problems that enter into providing the public with commodities or service, as the case may be, and correctly balanced supply and demand, and contracted his obligations involving the fixed charges, his troubles, instead of being solved, have only begun. Economists who study these questions tell us that 90 per cent of our troubles fall at some time in life. This class of industry has upon it perhaps the most severe strain placed upon any business, and much of this load could and should be removed.

Our merchants stand at the cross roads of prosperity and adversity. They are the first to feel the latter, and the last to get the benefit of the former. Calamities in the form of droughts, fires, tornadoes and floods call for an extension of credit to his customers. He soon learns that such accommodations pave the way for an increased business of the mail order houses who get the cash, while the tradesman carries the account; but the merchants' creditors are not quite so accommodating. The visits from the representatives of commercial agencies become more frequent. The profit and loss account grows as homestead laws are invoked by his customers, and lawyers lurk in the shadows of his business awaiting an opportunity to pounce upon him. These are only a part of his troubles. While the business battles are fiercely raging, and every ounce of his strength is struggling for the mastering of his problems, he is solicited by a committee of organized graft to take advertising space in a program.

Then comes the "uplifters" of either sex whom we will designate as "Lizzies"; perhaps she has just graduated from a finishing school where she contracted humanitarian chills and fever, and the only antidote is saving the world by spending other people's money in near-sighted uplift ventures. It matters not to her whether the merchant's account is overdrawn, and his banker is preparing to charge him storage rather than interest on his overdue notes; that the tradesman's wife is forced to drop her church and social duties through lack of raiment, and his children must leave school and seek employment before reaching the eighth grade, or that her victim has long since forgotten the name of a tailor in his home town. He must contribute or meet the odium of being classed as a tightwad, see his trade diminish, or turn over the keys to the sheriff.

It is one of the purposes of the League through publicity and solid thinking to lift unnecessary burdens off the backs of the business men of this State and nation, and to deal lustily with all the forces of society, "with malice toward none and charity for all."
